

Good

This Good Person Did This Good Thing

This is the part where you report the facts (Who, What, Where, When, Why and How) of the event you selected. You should provide details and specifics, which will highlight for the reader the elements necessary to give them a reasonable understanding of the event. Again, this part of the report should be about 1/3 of the paper. This is the part where you report the facts (Who, What, Where, When, Why and How) of the event you selected. You should provide details and specifics, which will highlight for the reader the elements necessary to give them a reasonable understanding of the event. Again, this part of the report should be about 1/3 of the paper. This is the part where you report the facts (Who, What, Where, When, Why and How) of the event you selected. You should provide details and specifics, which will highlight for the reader the elements necessary to give them a reasonable understanding of the event. Again, this part of the report should be about 1/3 of the paper.

This is the part where you get to explain your own views of WHY and HOW this event represents your view of the good or bad in human beings. Define (in your own words, not using a dictionary definition) what you believe good or evil to be. Then use specific examples from the story and provide your own commentary and viewpoints about how they meet your definition. You may wish to discuss the human behaviors in terms of the effects they have on the individual who engages in them, as well as the effect they have on others. Whatever you choose to do, be convincing. The best way to be convincing is to truly believe what you're writing. The best way to do that is to make wise choices in the beginning. Remember, however, just because you say something is good or evil doesn't make it so. You must use logic and reason and good explanations to convince your readers.

This is the part where you get to explain your own views of WHY and HOW this event represents your view of the good or bad in human beings. Define (in your own words, not using a dictionary definition) what you believe good or evil to be. Then use specific examples from the story and provide your own commentary and viewpoints about how they meet your definition. You may wish to discuss the human behaviors in terms of the effects they have on the individual who engages in them, as well as the effect they have on others. Whatever you choose to do, be convincing. The best way to be convincing is to truly believe what you're writing. The best way to do that is to make wise choices in the beginning. Remember, however, just because you say something is good or evil doesn't make it so. You must use logic and reason and good explanations to convince your readers.

This is the part where you get to explain your own views of WHY and HOW this event represents your view of the good or bad in human beings. Define (in your own words, not using a dictionary definition) what you believe good or evil to be. Then use specific examples from the story and provide your own commentary and viewpoints about how they meet your definition. You may wish to discuss the human behaviors in terms of the effects they have on the individual who engages in them, as well as the effect they have on others. Whatever you choose to do, be convincing. The best way to be convincing is to truly believe what you're writing. The best way to do that is to make wise choices in the beginning. Remember, however, just because you say something is good or evil doesn't make it so. You must use logic and reason and good explanations to convince your readers.

This is the part where you get to explain your own views of WHY and HOW this event represents your view of the good or bad in human beings. Define (in your own words, not using a dictionary definition) what you believe good or evil to be. Then use specific examples from the story and provide your own commentary and viewpoints about how they meet your definition. You may wish to discuss the human behaviors in terms of the effects they have on the individual who engages in them, as well as the effect they have on others. Whatever you choose to do, be convincing.

Your Name