

---

expression of it than the plot requires. Dialogue fits character and character fits action with an airtight precision that allows nothing from the outside to penetrate the filmmaker's conceptual structure. Much of the action takes place out of doors, often in spectacular natural settings, which are captured in